Quinta do Lago, Portugal

Tennis is high on the agenda at Quinta do Lago—which has a very good academy—but golf is also on the menu. This dramatic contemporary home in Parque Atlantico, on the southernmost tip of the estate, affords long views across the lakes and fairways of the San Lorenzo golf course. A glass staircase and a glass lift lead upstairs to the master suite, which is cantilevered over the infinity pool. The property has three more bedrooms, a spa area and a Minimalist garden. national travel, but is English enough to remind Peter he's really at home.

Florida

In the brief respites during the season, Peter needs to find time to hit his training camp in Florida to work on whatever's been letting him down and put serious work into the fitness levels that allow him to play for up to 11 hours at a time in the hot sun. He's used to Florida, having lived there for several years as a young player training at Nick Bollettieri's training camp—it was a big sacrifice for his parents but worth it.

Portugal

Oh, but when there is some downtime... There's nothing Peter likes better than to head off to his place on the Algarve to work on his golf game—somehow it doesn't feel at all like a busman's holiday or training, but it does help him with his reaction times. The Quinta do Lago complex is home to a large number of international sportsmen, so Peter never feels as if he stands out and the paparazzi stay away so he can properly relax. And in the bar, he can meet like-minded souls who understand the pressures he's under and girlfriend Lizzie can get together with the other girls (she kills him if he calls her a WAG).

Exotic trees and tropical gardens shelter this 10,871sq ft mansion from view, giving it privacy. The house, which has six bedrooms, combines Moorish and contemporary architecture to striking effect. The interiors are suitably grand, but the real attraction here is the great outdoors—the 2½-acre plot reaches down to Sarasota Bay and enjoys a 240ft water frontage, so you could kayak on the lagoon before having a swim in the oversize pool, or playing tennis in the professional court. Crimp Hill, Surrey

Little can beat Park Place for a tennis player who wants to be close to Wimbledon while being able to get away from it all. This eight-bedroom mansion stands in 15 acres of gardens, wildflower meadow and parkland at the edge of Windsor Great Park. The elegant reception rooms are rich in period features and the master suite, with two dressing rooms and bathrooms, takes up the whole western wing. The grounds house stables and a swimming pool.
